“The Chronicles of Awad” is a successful book aimed at young adults, kids from 11 to 16 years old, but that appeals to everyone. In the frenzy of London, on a scorching afternoon, Elize and Annie, two young girls with a special secret, recall with nostalgia the magical world of Awad, that world which they realized they are part of and which they love. While they are chatting, they are drawn by a buzz coming from a book. Intrigued, they open it and they get blinded by a magical light; when they open their eyes they find themselves in Awad. But it’s not the wonderful world the thought it was. Everything has changed, and they find out the reason for such drastic change once the royal guard brings them to the Palace. Solaria, the queen, is not on the throne anymore, and in her place they find an evil, lying usurper called Buio. The two friends are summoned in Awad by a fairy, Lunasole: she explains to them their terrible situation and asks them to help her find the queen. Thus this fantastic story begins. It is proving to be very popular among the thousands of Elena Mora’s fans, an 11-year-old writer already promising to become a star in the writing world.

The style is addictive, fun, ironic and she is enlightened by her imagination and her superior skills. The book is thought-provoking, it makes you dream and think positively in the face of adversity.
