SOUL KEEPER

Rocco Luigi Gliro

It's a story between reality and dreams, between hope and the inevitable. It's about life and death. The protagonist is a graveyard's keeper, and he's also the narrating voice. He tells the stories and the dead listen. What's interesting about this graveyard is that the dead are crammed in drawers, not cemetery plots, as if they were documents to be read in order to learn something and live a better life. The graveyard has its rules: in the morning the dead leave the graveyard and head for home (what used to be their home before they died) to go visit their living relatives and help them solve remaining problems. The dead want to make sense out of their death and the keeper wants to make sense out of his life.
