Marco Gottardi

Two narrators for a powerful lyrical novel. It tells the story of Lorenzo, a young man with good ideals. He was born in a remote mountain village and now moves to Venice to attend university and fulfill his ambition to become a writer. His experience in Venice will create in him a sense of distrust in the future and in mankind. He will see the values he had when he arrived in Venice decay before his eyes, becoming a disinterested spectator of his catastrophe. We may call this a novel of anti-formation: a great modern-times canvas, where themes like love, the function of art and the emptiness of life are traced back to their core thanks to a very original style, pure to the point of becoming paroxysmal.
